UNIVERSAL LANGUAGES

The United nations recognises as universal languages:

- Arabic
- Chinese
- Spanish
- French
- English
- Russian

IS THERE OTHER UNIVERSAL LANGUAGES?

- Esperanto was a language created by L. L. Zamenhof in 1887 (esperanto translated to english means one who hopes)
- The goal of this language was to create an easy and flexible language that could be used as a global language.
- Even though it's spoken in a range of 63'000 to 2 million people, its not really used or known because its not the official language of any country and other languages are nowadays more known

WHY ENGLISH IS THE MOST USED LANGUAGE

- This is mostly due to the expansion of the British Empire, in the 20th century it had almost one fourth of the world population in that time and in 1920, the empire covered 35,500,000 km. It was also known as the empire where the sun never sets, because of its global influence.
- Thanks to this English, as a language spread across the world easily, and its simplicity helped a lot to be easy to learn and understand.

WHY OTHER LANGUAGES ARE NOT USED AS MUCH AS ENGLISH?

- Its mostly because English simplicity, for reaching B2 English level, you need inbetween 400-500 study hours, according to Cambridge University, but in cases such as French for getting a B2 level you will need an approximate inbetween 560-650 hours of study.
- Its also a language that has a lot of importance nowadays in every aspect such as business, education or politics mostly due to the importance of the United States as a country by being the only world superpower left since the fall of the Soviet Union in 1991

CONCLUSION

- As a conclusion we'd like to point out that English is really important to learn and master due to the factors previously mentioned before, such as its simplicity, how known English is and its utility.
